

Hello Beautiful Soul,

Seventeen states just reported increases in homeschooling this year.

North Carolina has over 165,000 homeschooled kids.

Georgia has nearly 90,000.

Virginia jumped from 53,680 to 56,000 in just one year.

And I just watched a video that shows exactly why parents are walking away from the system...

A mother who spent 23 years as a public school teacher gave it all up.

Her retirement money.

Her pension.

Everything.

Four years ago, she started teaching her kids in a Methodist church basement...

And now she's built a one-room schoolhouse on her 18th-century farm.

Her kids learn to love Jesus while caring for farm animals every morning...

They harvest vegetables from the organic garden...

The older kids teach the younger ones...

They save seeds for next season...

They're mastering reading... writing... math...

But under sunlight instead of fluorescent lights.

With dirt under their fingernails and purpose in their hearts.

This is what I saw coming when we started homeschooling Azai and Zuri...

Parents realizing their kids deserve better than factory-style education.

Researchers say it's younger parents leading this shift...

For us... homeschooling isn't stigmatized anymore.

It's freedom.

And as public school enrollment keeps dropping...

More families are choosing this path.

P.S. If you've been thinking about homeschooling... this movement is growing because parents are finally trusting themselves over the system.
